

Yes! You Can Vote!

There are many misconceptions surrounding whether or not people who have been previously incarcerated can vote in the state of Indiana, leading to confusion and misinformation regarding the right to vote. Indiana is one of 26 states (including D.C.) where people who have been previously incarcerated can vote upon release.

After a conviction, you get your right to vote back the day you leave jail or prison in Indiana. People who have been previously incarcerated should check their registration, and re-register to vote if it has been canceled. Individuals on parole, probation, home detention, or people who are in jail awaiting trial, can vote.¹ People who are in a community corrections² program can also vote.

Every election is important!

We hope every Hoosier owns their power and exercises their right to vote. The voter must have resided in their precinct for 30 days prior to the election.

Hoosiers can register to vote or check their status at: www.indianavoters.in.gov
